1. Current state of affairs in the relevant sector

Local communities in the southwest region of Macedonia are divided along ethnic lines and have less and less opportunities to develop genuine interaction and regain trust among each other. Even though municipalities are small, social spaces such as café bars, restaurants, cultural and sports events are clearly ethnically divided. Young people study in different shifts so they do not meet, and cannot understand each other as they do not even speak the others' language. By organizing joint actions and events related to common interest issues, we shall create the much needed space for interaction and initiate cooperation. The CSO sector in the southwest region of Macedonia is weak and also divided by ethnic lines. In order to become credible actors in participatory democracy, CSO's need to improve their autonomy, representative legitimacy and accountability. Municipal interethnic councils are not participating effectively in political processes, and they need to improve their work and promote it among local communities. Multi-sectoral local partnerships and coalitions where CSO's can join efforts with public and private sector are rare in the targeted region.
